

NEW YORK POST

JUNE 26, 2008

Haute list Fight the frizz

■ Are your pants blushing or are you just happy to see me? House of Holland's color-change jeans (right) for men and women turn from neon magenta to fluororange (fluorescent orange) as temperatures increase. They're $295 at Seven New York (110 Mercer St.; [646] 654-0158, sevennewyork.com).

Zandy Mangold (2)

Russie Look: The "Australia"-less Nicole Kidman wears one of the newest Vogue (above) designed by Catherine Martin, Elizabeth Luhrmann's wife and a rising costume designer in her own right. Her work has never been available at retail — until now. Four of the gowns arrived at Goodman this week. The pieces are $9,850 each in the clothing salon — additional available by special order.

■ Bless this shop: Quirky design duo Desiree Heiss and Ines Kaag, a.k.a. Bless, are best known for rethinking basic fashion premises and repurposing objets and materials into unexpected accessories (think fur wigs and sock boots). Their oddball approach has led to a span of artistic installations all over the world and collaborative projects with companies such as Alfa Romeo. Tomorrow, Bless opens its first New York pop-up shop, where customers and the curious can purchase any of six "Bless boxes" which contain themed Bless products — the "Home" box includes a fur hammock — as well as other objects selected by Yasmine Gauster, who founded the original Bless shop in Berlin. (38 Ludlow St., between Hester and Grand streets; [212] 228-6848, bless-service.de)

Michael Sofronski (2)